ished by the architect, and to morrow Antonnius Pontifex Maximus might himself be coming to consecrate it to mighty Jove. The religion of the Roman has been celebrated there. Sacrifices to the gods of Baalbee were offered there for near four hundred years after the Christian era. Then another religion occupied its halls and shrines. The Christian possessed it. The Cross was erected where the beardless statue of Jupiter had stood. The Bishop of Heliopolis sat in the Council of Antioch.

Three centuries heard the hymns of the Church chanted in its temples; and the lay procession of the priests swept through its hexagon and quadrangle. Then war was in the land.

Nor Minness the Marran.—One John Vandeveer, traveling from Philadelphia to Parkersburg, on the Fennsylvania Railroad, got intoxicated, and lost his ticket. Not being able to produce it, and not heing willing to pay for another, he was put out of the car. In doing so be fell down a bank, and subsequently, in going after his hat, fell among some atones and injured himself so that he died. The wife brought sait against the Railroad Company, and got $1,734 damages. The Company appeared to the Supreme Court, where the judgment was reversed, on the ground of the want of a distinct direction to the jury as to the measure of damages, and a new trial awarded. Upon this trial, the jury gave a verdict of $2,500 damages.

Some of the Institutions of a Printing Office.

The "Devil" is an institution by and of himself. He inks the type, or turns the crank, or "lays on the sheets." (Other people sometimes do the latter.) If it were not for him, the paper would not "come out." He sweeps out the office. He builds the fire—an appropriate work for a fiend—and swears because some one has "hooked the kindlings." He does the "chores at the bouse." He "quiets the baby." Yet his most important duty is to keep watch on the street corner so as to inform the editor when the sheriff is after him!

With all this, the "Devil" shoulders all the bad or smulty jokes of the editor. When the mighty man of the pen is ashamed of an ex-mighty man of the pen is ashamed of an ex-pression, and still desires to utter it, he says, 'our Devil says thus and so," and the poor Devil has to stand it!

Devit has to stand it!

Nevertheless, the "Devil" is an important personage in society. He attends lectures. He frequents concerts, shows, and the opers; but—I say it more in sorrow than in anger—he seldom attends church! He presents himself at the ticket office of the "show," with his "linen" reversed by way of a change, (for he seldom possesses more than a single shirt,) as "a member of the Press," and so presses his claims that he is admitted without the accustomed quarter. But our young friend is not alone. He is too much of a gallant for that. His "woman" fewith him, and he and his "woman" pass in and enjoy the entertainment, which, whatever it may be, is taken down in doses alternated with peanuts and tobacco. For the "Devil" chews as may be, is taken down in doses alternated with peanuts and tobacco. For the "Devil" chews as well as smokes, and spits profusely upon carpets when he gets within reach of them.

I never heard of a Printer's Devil who had "risen in life," but I do the class the justice to say that, to my knowledge, none of them have fallen very low. Some of these "Devila" have descended to be mayors of cities. Some of them have even let themselves down into Congressmen. But I never knew one to degrade himself so low as to become a President of the United States.

So much for the "Devil." I know the "ani. So much for the "Devil." I know the "ani-1,000 mai"-I've been there myself. "Bully for 2,055 him "-Artemus Ward.

The Nature of Wealth and Poverty.

Men rarely know the meaning of the word Men rarely know the meaning of the word "rich." It is a relative of the word, implying its opposite, "poor," as the word "north" implies its opposite "south." Men always speak and write as if riches were absolute, and it were possible, by following certain scientific precepts, for everybody to be rich. Whereas riches are a power like that of electricity, acting only through inequalities of itself. The force of the guinea you have in your pocket depends wholly on the default of a guinea in your neighbor's pocket. If he did not want it it would be of no use to you; the degree of power it possesses depends accurately upon the need Harrisvitie. 565 Washington 1,046

The Ruins of Baalbee—Melancholy, says a traveler, in looking the last look on such a place, sensible that one will never see it more. The rippling stream seemed to mock me as I passed over it:

And then, in the ghostly stillness of the night,

Men may come and men may go,

But I dow on forever."

And then, in the ghostly stillness of the night,
